Introduction

London is now owed £50 million in unpaid Congestion Charge and Penalty Charge Notices by foreign embassies, with the unpaid bill rising by £1 million a month. The loss of revenue to Transport for London (TfL) and Londoners now equals more than £6 per person living in London<sup>1</sup>.

The United States Embassy is one of the worst defaulters, owing £5 million to Londoners since their sudden decision to stop paying the Congestion Charge in 2005. They are followed by Russia, Japan and Germany in terms of money owed to TfL and Londoners. During 2009 alone the US and Russian embassies both racked up a bill of over £1million in unpaid Congestion Charge and Penalty Charge Notices. Along with other embassies the cumulative unpaid bill of Congestion Charge and Penalty Charge Notices grew by more than £11.6 million in 2009.

Only a small proportion of embassies based in London consistently refuse to pay the congestion charge. The latest figures show that 74% of Embassies (119 out of 162) pay the charge on a regular basis<sup>2</sup>. Many of the non-paying embassies are some of the richest nations in the world.

With the ever rising amounts owed to Londoners and the reasons for non-payment diminishing as the Western Extension Zone is abolished it seems timely for London's defaulting embassies to pay the Congestion Charge and begin paying their multi-million pound back log.

The Congestion Charge – A little history

Contained within the Greater London Authority Act 1999 was the right of the Authority and its Mayor to create a zone in which a congestion charge could be levied. The former Mayor of London used this authority and in February 2003 charging began.

The congestion zone was designed to cut congestion in the centre of London, a target that it has initially met. It is an undeniable fact that if the Congestion Charge had not been introduced the current levels of congestion within the zone would be significantly greater.

The Congestion Charge has also allowed extra investment in public transport and provided a number of other benefits for the local environment, including greater use of public transport, reductions in CO<sub>2</sub> and other pollutants and improved road safety.

By refusing to pay the charge, which is used solely to administer the scheme and fund transport schemes in London, embassies are benefiting from the generosity of their host city.

A number of embassies refused to pay from the outset (particularly African Union nations<sup>3</sup>), and by 2004, already a million pounds was owed to London by various embassies. The Government was, however, able to convince a number of the embassies to begin paying the charge<sup>4</sup>. Controversy only really began in 2005, when, after paying the charge for two years, the United States Embassy suddenly announced that it would no longer pay the charge as they now considered it a tax.

Over the summer of 2005 a number of embassies from EU countries reportedly met to discuss how to sidestep the charge and some time afterwards the German Embassy announced it would no longer pay the charge<sup>5</sup>. The French Embassy had no problem with the charge until 2007 and then decided they agreed with the actions taken by the American Embassy and started to refuse to pay the charge<sup>6</sup>.

These changes of opinion tied-in conveniently with the west-ward expansion of the Congestion Charge zone as the Western Extension Zone (WEZ), as the number of embassies included within the zone increased.

In 2006 the Embassy of the United Arab Emirates backed down and announced that it would start paying the charge having previously refused to pay from the very start. The Embassy cleared its debt and promised to begin to require its staff to pay the congestion charge<sup>7</sup>.

Tax and the Vienna Convention

*“But no one has to pay the congestion charge. It’s simply the price to be paid, much like paying for a swim in the local pool. No one has to drive their car into the zone.
If you don’t want to pay, don’t make the journey. Or take public transport.”*

Stephen Pollard, The US Taxing our Patience, The Times newspaper<sup>8</sup>

Diplomats avoiding the Congestion Charge often cite the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations as the international treaty that legitimises their position. The Convention, agreed in 1961, does release diplomats from paying tax to their host country. However Article 34 of the Convention which deals with this issue, specifically denies diplomats the right to avoid paying for specific services.

The key fact is that the Congestion Charge in London is not a tax<sup>9</sup> but a charge made for the use of certain types of private vehicles within specified hours, on some of London’s most congested roads. Foreign diplomatic staff should pay for this in the same way that British diplomats pay to use toll roads where they are based. Indeed a Times newspaper editorial last year described the embassies and diplomatic missions that refuse to pay the charge as having an “intellectually unsustainable” position and that “the US view causes unnecessary offence”<sup>10</sup>.

Britain’s Office for National Statistics (ONS) and the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (FCO), rejected the argument that the charge was a tax because firstly, by law, all revenue must be spent on improving London’s transport system, as such the ONS consider the charge as a “self financed market service”. Secondly, the ONS considered the amount charged as reasonable to the costs involved.

In a startling lack of consistency, in Oslo and Singapore where a similar charge exists, both British and U.S embassy staff pay the charge<sup>11 12</sup>, and the US Federal Department for Transport itself does not count road tolls as a tax but as a user fee<sup>13</sup>.

The British Government has made it clear to embassies that the Congestion Charge should not be considered as a tax. In 2005 Jack Straw, the then Foreign Secretary, told the House of Commons:

“We have informed missions of our view that the congestion charge does not constitute a form of direct taxation under the Vienna Convention, but is a charge analogous to a motorway toll, and that they are expected to pay.”<sup>14</sup>

The Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) has also published its own judgement on the issue. The OECD looked in particular at the organisational structure of Transport for London as a “quasi corporation”. The report referred to the fact that there is a legal requirement that the revenue from the charge must be spent on transport in London. “The congestion charge is therefore a service charge not a tax because of the ring fenced accounting inherent in the scheme”.

The report recognised that there was a cross subsidy (money from the Congestion Charge might go to trains for example) but pointed out that this was common in the private sector<sup>15</sup>.

Boris Johnson puts his foot in his mouth and ensures Londoners lose out

On this issue Boris Johnson has tried to have his cake and eat it. While he claims he tells the embassies that they need to pay the charge he also tries to appeal to the motoring lobby, and elements within the Conservative Party, by on a number of occasions, publicly calling it a tax<sup>16</sup>. On 27th November 2008, when announcing the scrapping of the Western Zone Boris Johnson declared, “we can lift this tax”<sup>17</sup>. A spokesman for the Mayor was later forced to retract this statement<sup>18</sup>.

Unfortunately Boris Johnson has not learnt his lesson. A year later he managed to repeat the mistake, this time speaking to the London Assembly when he described the Congestion Charge as a tax (Question 0223/2009)<sup>19</sup>. These clumsy high profile comments from the Mayor of London immediately legitimise the arguments of those avoiding the charge and totally undermine the campaign to persuade embassies and diplomatic missions to pay the Congestion Charge. During his election campaign Boris Johnson could play down his habit of putting his foot in his mouth, but now this habit is costing London tens of millions of pounds.

Regrettably the actions of Boris Johnson have also been followed by many Conservative London Assembly Members, who have on a number of occasions provided an excuse to non-paying embassies by frequently referring to the Congestion Charge as a tax<sup>20 21</sup>. Incredibly some have even stated that they agree with the actions of the US and other non-paying embassies<sup>22</sup>.

Liberal Democrat action

Liberal Democrats in City Hall have taken a strong lead in consistently demanding that the embassies pay the money owed to London. The Liberal Democrat London Assembly Transport Spokesperson Caroline Pidgeon has regularly used Mayor's Question Time as well as other opportunities to ensure that the Mayor continues to pursue this issue. She has publicly described the embassy behaviour as an insult to Londoners and the city.

Caroline also proposed, and won the backing of the London Assembly for a motion, which called on Boris to write to the Heads of State demanding that they instruct their embassies to pay up. The Mayor has refused to do this and flatly rejected the majority view of the London Assembly. While the Liberal Democrats provide leadership on this issue Boris Johnson has refused to take action and through his ill-judged comments legitimised the actions of the non paying embassies.

"All the international evidence and legal opinion clearly states that the Congestion Charge is exactly that - it is a charge not a tax and embassies cannot leave bills unpaid. Indeed let us never forget that for the first two years of its existence the US Embassy did actually pay the Congestion Charge. The US Embassy position is indefensible and an appalling example to other embassies who follow the lead of the US."<sup>23</sup>

and Vice-chair of the London Assembly Transport Committee*

Questions and Answers on the Congestion Charge

Question: What is the Mayor of London doing to pursue the money we are owed?

Answer: Boris Johnson wants to have his cake and eat it when asked about his views on the embassies that avoid paying. He tells Londoners that he wants them to pay, but when he wants to undermine the Congestion Charge he attacks it as a tax<sup>24</sup>, supporting the argument that the embassies use to escape the charge. Boris Johnson has even refused to take the modest step of writing to heads of states of the embassies and diplomatic missions of countries that refuse to pay the Congestion Charge, despite being urged to do so by the London Assembly.

Question: Isn't the charge a tax?

Answer: No, it's a charge. Transport for London is a corporation, and has the same legal status as the Post Office. The Congestion Charge is a payment for services, and not paying the congestion charge is like not paying for a stamp. The US Federal Department for Transport also classifies road tolls as user fees and not taxes<sup>25</sup>. Indeed it is worth remembering that the US Embassy was happy to pay the congestion fee until mid 2005, but then suddenly changed its mind. Furthermore the US has not objected to contributing to similar schemes in other cities where it has embassies.

Question: Why doesn't the Mayor or Transport for London take them to court?

Answer: The Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations protects diplomats from prosecution in the countries to which they are posted, so while they are breaking the law by not paying they cannot be taken to court.

Question: What has the reaction been in America to their embassy's stance?

Answer: The extremely influential New York Times published an editorial condemning its Embassy's behaviour and calling on them to pay up. It agreed with the British stance that the charge is not a tax, "The British make a good case that the charge is not a tax, but a toll for the use of selected streets. Their diplomats, they note, regularly pay tolls on American roads and bridges." The article concludes "We don't buy the idea that diplomats are immune to the surcharge" and that "Mr Livingstone is certainly within his rights to demand payment, which may now amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars, including fines" <sup>26</sup>

Question: What effect has the abolition of the Western Extension Zone had?

Answer: On the 4th January 2011 the Western Extension (WEZ) to the Congestion Charge was scrapped by Mayor Boris Johnson thus removing a large number of embassies from the Zone including the French, Greek and Ukrainian Embassies and missions all of which have racked up charges and penalties of over £1 million. Since the extension of the zone appeared to be a catalyst for embassies to begin refusing payments there seems little reason for these embassies to not resume payment of the Congestion Charge now that the WEZ has been abolished.

Question: Aren't British Diplomats exempt from the congestion scheme in Stockholm?

Answer: Yes but we have a Congestion Charge and they have a congestion tax. Central Government in Sweden made a specific decision that the scheme was a tax. The international norm remains that congestion charging is a charge for a service. Secondly, unlike London's scheme where the charge is collected and goes to a corporation (Transport for London), Stockholm's scheme is administered and run by the central Government. Unlike Stockholm's scheme the revenue collected by the Congestion Charge in London is ring-fenced to be spent in London only. This is not true of the Stockholm scheme where the revenue can be spent over a broader and unspecified area<sup>27</sup>. In summary comparing the Stockholm and London's schemes is not comparing like with like. The two schemes operate in two completely different ways.

Question: What are the Penalty Charge Notices that embassies owe in addition to unpaid Congestion Charge payments?

Answer: Any driver who has not paid the Congestion Charge by midnight on the following day is issued a Penalty Charge Notice (PCN) of £120 to the registered keeper of the vehicle.

If the PCN is paid within 14 days of the date of service the driver receives a 50% discount, with the amount payable being £60, rather than £120.

EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
LONDON

Note No. 042

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Protocol Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, with reference to its Diplomatic Note A/102/02, dated March 18, 2002, and wishes to inform the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the United States Government's opposition to the imposition of the Mayor of London's Congestion Charging Scheme on the U.S. Embassy and its personnel. If this fee is imposed, it will have a direct and costly effect on the U.S. Embassy and its personnel.

Under Articles 23 and 34 of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations ("VCDR"), Diplomatic Missions and their members are "exempt from all dues and taxes" imposed in their host state, including by municipal authorities, subject to specified exceptions. The proposed traffic congestion fee does not fall within any exception to the presumptive exemption from tax, including in particular the exception under Article 34(e), which permits "charges for specific services rendered." Under Article 34(e), charges are permitted for the supply of commodities or services (such as electricity or garbage collection) which are of direct benefit to the diplomat or the mission. Moreover, to qualify as a charge for the service provided, and not as an impermissible assessment in the nature of a tax, the amount of the fee must reliably correlate to the value or the cost of the service.

In the present case, it is clear that the City of London's proposed fee does not reflect the actual cost or value of a service. Instead, it is evident that the fee is intended as a fiscal disincentive to driving in the downtown city core, in the same manner that tax measures are often used to discourage unwanted forms of activity. While such measures may be designed with broader policy goals in mind, this fact cannot change their inherent character as a tax, nor the fact that the funds derived therefrom constitute tax revenue. Unlike road tolls or fees for parking in a municipal garage, where charges cover the cost of attendants, maintenance and recovery of capital costs, the congestion fee is openly designed to discourage use, with the amount of the fee set accordingly.

In view of the foregoing, the United States Government opposes this fee and hopes to negotiate instead a reciprocally balanced agreement for the exemption of the U.S. Diplomatic Mission in London from its imposition. However, should the City of London adopt the congestion fee as presently announced, thereby subjecting the Embassy and its members to the substantial costs involved, the Department of State is prepared to consider appropriate reciprocal action with respect to vehicles of the Embassy of the United Kingdom in Washington, DC. The Embassy, therefore, requests that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office take the necessary steps to obtain an appropriate waiver.

The Embassy of the United States of America avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Protocol Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office the assurances of its highest consideration.

Protocol Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office presents its compliments to the Embassy of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to the Embassy's Note No. 042 of 24 July 2002 concerning the Congestion Charging Scheme for Central London.

As the Embassy is aware, the Scheme is not an initiative of Her Majesty's Government, but that of the elected Greater London Authority which is responsible for transport in the capital. Government departments, Parliament and other institutions located in the central zone will not be exempt from charges under the Scheme. However, while Her Majesty's Government is of the view (please see below) that there are no legal grounds for exempting Diplomatic Missions from the Scheme, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office recognises the financial impact charges under the Scheme will have on Missions. As explained in the Division's Note No A330/02 of 18 June 2002, Ministers at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office twice approached the Mayor of London to determine whether any concessions might be made to Missions. Unfortunately, the Mayor was unable to accept the proposals put forward by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

In its Note under reference, the Embassy refers to Articles 23 of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations 1961 ("VCDR"). It is the view of Her Majesty's Government that Article 23 has no relevance to the Congestion Charging Scheme, since it concerns exemption of the sending State and the head of the mission from dues and taxes in respect of the premises of the mission. The Congestion Charging Scheme does not relate to premises but to vehicles.

The Embassy also refers to Article 34 of the VCDR, which provides that diplomatic agents shall be exempt from all national, regional and municipal dues and taxes, save for dues and taxes which fall into certain categories including (in paragraph (e)), "charges levied for specific services rendered".

It is the view of Her Majesty's Government that the fees to be levied under the Congestion Charging Scheme do not constitute a "due or tax" within the meaning of Article 34 of the VCDR. Fees under the scheme are charged for use of road space in a designated area and are analogous to car parking charges. Payment of the fee buys the right to enter the designated area in a vehicle, in the same way that purchase of a car parking ticket buys the right to park a car in a designated area.

It is furthermore the view of Her Majesty's Government that the congestion charge will be levied for specific services rendered, as the proceeds from the fee are to be spent solely on improving London's transport system, including the roads, in order to reduce traffic congestion in the central London area. Short-term measures paid for by the fee will include accelerating road and bridge maintenance programmes and improvements for car users, as well as measures directed at improving public transport which should reduce the amount of traffic on the roads. In the medium to long term, it is envisaged that the fee could be used to help bring forward other projects such as selected improvements to the road system and new river crossings. In addition, those paying the charge should immediately benefit from improved circulation of traffic within the central London area, as specified in Transport for London's publications circulated by them to Diplomatic Missions.

Protocol Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Embassy of the United States of America the assurances of its highest consideration.

Protocol Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office presents its compliments to the Embassy of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to the Embassy's Note No. 075/2002 of 3 December 2002 about the possible exemption, based on the provisions of the 1951 Consular Convention between the United Kingdom and the United States of America (the "Consular Convention"), of US diplomatic and consular vehicles from the Greater London Authority's Congestion Charging Scheme for Central London.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has carefully considered the Embassy's argument that the Consular Convention may serve as a basis for the exemption of the Embassy's vehicles on a bilateral basis. Particular attention has been given to Article 12(2) of the Consular Convention and the words "no tax or other similar charge of any kind (national, state, provincial, municipal, or other) shall .... be collected from the sending State .... in respect of the ownership, possession, or use of movable property ...." owned or used exclusively for purposes arising out of the operation of the consular establishment, as quoted by the Embassy.

Her Majesty's Government does of course accept that where the Consular Convention and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (VCCR) differ in any respect, US consular officials in the UK (and British consular officials in the US) are entitled to claim the higher of the two standards.

As the Embassy is aware, Her Majesty's Government takes the view that fees levied under the Congestion Charging Scheme are analogous to parking fees and toll charges. As such, they do not constitute a "due or tax" within the meaning of Article 34 of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations or Article 49 of the VCCR.

Moreover, they do not constitute a charge "similar" to a tax for the purposes of Article 12(2) of the Consular Convention. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office notes that both the Embassy and US consular posts in the United Kingdom have long accepted, as have their British counterparts in the US, the need to pay parking fees and toll charges, thereby demonstrating that they do not consider such fees to be "similar" to a tax under the terms of Article 12(2) or 13(4) of the Consular Convention.

It is also the view of Her Majesty's Government that the fees levied under the Congestion Charging Scheme constitute a charge levied for specific services rendered. As explained in detail in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Note No. A519/02 of 6 September 2002, the proceeds from the fee are to be spent solely on improving London's transport system, including roads, in order further to reduce traffic congestion in the central London area. It is the view of Her Majesty's Government that charges levied for specific services rendered do not constitute a "tax or other similar charge of any kind" for the purposes of Articles 12(2) or 13(4) of the Consular Convention. The US Government appears to have the same view, as it has accepted that its Embassy and consular posts in the UK (like their British counterparts in the US) are liable to pay other such charges, such as the proportion of UK National Non-Domestic Rates charged in respect of services from which diplomatic and consular missions directly benefit.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office regrets, therefore, that it is unable to agree that the Consular Convention provides a basis in law for exempting the Embassy from the Congestion Charge. The Embassy will recall that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has recognised the financial implications payment of the charge will have for diplomatic missions. As a consequence, approaches were made to the Mayor of London asking him to consider a concession for diplomatic missions. Unfortunately, he was unable to agree these proposals. Transport for London have made clear that diplomatic missions could only be exempted from the scheme if the Greater London Authority was under a clear legal obligation to grant such exemption.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is also aware that schemes similar to the Congestion Charging Scheme for Central London have been in operation in the capitals of some other countries for a number of years, and believes that the US

Missions to those countries have accepted that they are liable to charges under these schemes. It is understood that two such countries are Norway and Singapore.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office notes that, should it not be possible to reach agreement on an exemption of US consular and diplomatic vehicles from the Congestion Charging Scheme, the Government of the United States reserves the right to implement reciprocal measures in Washington. It is not aware that a congestion charging scheme is in operation in Washington nor that there are plans to introduce one. If such a scheme were introduced, the British Embassy would of course meet its obligations to pay any charges for which it was liable on the same basis as members of the public. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office would deeply regret any discriminatory reciprocal measures. Her Majesty's Government would not expect the British Embassy in Washington to be discriminated against.

Protocol Division of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Embassy of the United States of America the assurances of its highest consideration.

4. (SBU) In 2003, the Mayor of London introduced a congestion charge of BPS 5 (USD 10) per day to drive into the central portion of London (50 pence per day for those living inside the zone). The city considers this a fee for service (improved transportation infrastructure, decreased pollution and congestion), and did not grant a diplomatic exemption. After determining that the fee was actually a tax, and therefore not payable under the Vienna Conventions of Diplomatic and Consular Affairs, the Department of State engaged in lengthy negotiations with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the City of London. In July 2005, after negotiations concluded unsuccessfully, the Department instructed the Mission and its members to stop paying the tax. The U.S. Embassy was not the first to refuse to pay, and following the expansion of the congestion zone and increase in the fee to BPS 8 (USD 16) in 2007, a large number of missions, including 23 of the 27 European Union missions in London, now refuse to pay the tax. London Mayor Ken Livingstone has focused his ire publicly against the U.S. Embassy and the Ambassador personally. His position, however, should be seen in the wider context of his anti-American positions on many issues and his coziness to the likes of Hugo Chavez and Fidel Castro.
